Preface to the first edition.

THIS Dictionary has been published by me to supply a long-felt desideratum in Oriental Literature. It is a counterpart of my Student's Practical Dictionary with English and Hindustani meanings, which has been very favourably received in almost every province of India where Urdu is spoken by the masses. This Hindustani-English Dictionary was originally undertaken with some misgivings as to whether I might be able to offer it to the public at so low a price. No doubt, there are before the public Dictionaries of this sort published in England by some competent oriental scholars, but unfortunately these Dictionaries have not found their way into the family libraries of persons of limited means owing to the high prices at which they are sold. This Dictionary is the cheapest ever published in India or England. Under these circumstances the Publisher has every hope that it will receive the patronge of the educated public that are in need of its assistance.

Preface to the second edition

In introducing the second edition of the "Practical Dictionary" to the public I beg to invite their attention to the fact that, while the price of the book remains the same, the matter contained in it has been considerably enlarged. The entire work has been thoroughly and carefully revised.

The growing demand for this Dictionary from all parts of India affords ample evidence of its universal popularity, and I sincerely hope the public will find the present edition an appreciable improvement on the last.

(ن)

ن núṇ, the 25th letter of the Arabic and the 29th of the Persian alphabet. It corresponds to न in Sanskrit and is one of the dental letters having the sound of the English n. with the following exceptions:—1.—When it is quiescent in the middle or end of a word and follows a simple long vowel or madda it has a very slight nasal sound and is called نون غنه núṇ-i-gunna, as in زبون zabúṇ, bad, and زمان zamáṇ, time. If, however, the word at the end of which it occurs be so placed in composition that the ن becomes moveable by izáfat, it ceases to be nasal and resumes its original sound as a dental letter. 2—When it precedes ب be or پ pe, it has the sound of m; as, in منبر mimbar, a pulpit, سنپت sampat, wealth 3.—Before ک káf or گ gáf, it assumes a nasal sound similar to that which the English n. has in the words 'song,' 'sunk,' as in لنکا Lanká. It denotes 50 according to abjad

OPINIONS.

1. PRESIDENT, MADRAS SCHOOL, BOOK & LITERATURE SOCIETY.—"I have much pleasure in informing you that the Committee of the M. S. B. & L. S., in recognition of your valuable labours in the preparation of the Century Dictionary, make a grant of Rupees five hundred towards the expense of its publication."

2. PRINCIPAL, FORMAN CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, LAHORE —"I have not, as yet, been able to examine it with any great care, but what little I have seen of it convinces me that you have done a public service in preparing this work.

3. CHRISTIAN COLLEGE MAGAZINE, MADRAS —"This book of over nine hundred pages is the best of its kind in existence...It is much more than an ordinary, dictionary, as the various uses of English words are shown by copious illustrations from English books, and, what to the European student is of still greater value, idomatic sentences showing the exact force of the Urdu terms are given on almost every page."

4. REV. E. M. WHERRY, D. D.—"It is a monument of your life's work and one that will stand long after you have joined the majority."

5. THE MADRAS MAIL —"It bears the impress of the author's careful scholarship in Urdu . He has taken the trouble to distinguish the different senses in which woods are used in ordinary prose and poetry and to illustrate them to citations from standard authors or current literature...By using the Roman character for the transliteration of Urdu words, great economy in space has been achieved, with the result that in a work of nearly one thousand pages has been embodied quite the largest number of words met with in any Anglo-Vernacular Dictionary Mr Whyte's Dictionary has the double recommendation of being up to date and being priced low enough to place it within the reach of students."

6. THE STATESMAN, CALCUTTA —"The book is meant primarily for Indians . and this purpose is well served by the system which Principal Whyte has adopted of classical quotations and copious illustrative idiomatic phrases .. But there is no need to hesitate in recommending it also to those Englishmen at any rate who would feel ashamed to continue residence in India without some attempt to master the tongue that is daily becoming more of an imperial language .... The manager of production deserves special commendation, for the work referred to is printed in heavy black type and admirably spaced ...Mr. Whyte's dictionary deserves a wide circulation and he himself, the country's thanks for.....what one hopes may prove more or less of a monumental work.
